Thanks, Mark -- here you go:

As we continue to review BP's internal report, we have noticed a number of substantial omissions and inaccuracies in the document.

Halliburton remains confident that all the work it performed with respect to the Macondo well was completed in accordance with BP's specifications for its well construction plan and instructions, and that it is fully indemnified under its contract for any of the allegations contained in the report.

Deepwater operations are inherently complex and a number of contractors are involved which routinely make recommendations to a single point of contact, the well owner. The well owner is responsible for designing the well program and any testing related to the well. Contractors do not specify well design or make decisions regarding testing procedures as that responsibility lies with the well owner.

Halliburton will provide additional comments regarding the report as appropriate.
