18” shoe implications – fracturing pathways to sea floor

At the 18” shoe depth the formation’s resistance to fracturing is estimated to be 5,465 psi, compared with an imposed pressure of ca. 10,900 psi. Under this scenario the formation will fracture (split apart) and hydrocarbons will be injected into the formation, driven by the excess pressure at the shoe.