Subject: FOSC Report Assistance

Hi Richard,

I hope you are doing well and have returned to some sense of normalcy after a very busy and dynamic 2010. With any luck, 2011 will not be quite so exciting.

I am writing to ask your help on a project I was recently assigned. If you are not the correct point of contact, please let me know.

The CG is required to write a report, called the Federal On-scene Coordinator's (FOSC) Report, following an oil spill response. The report is to address the situation as it developed, the actions taken, the resources committed, and the problems encountered (all from the government perspective). One of the sections will address source control. In general, I have a pretty good grasp of what the report needs to cover and have a number of folks within the CG that I can reach out to for details.

Our main gap, however, is that we really don't have a good understanding of BP's source control organization in the early days (i.e. April & May) in terms of people involved and process for identifying, prioritizing and developing the source control options. Is there anything that has already been prepared that you could share with me to help cover this gap? At most,

I am looking to include 1-2 paragraphs of very high level information. The intent is merely to set the scene for our involvement in Houston - what was the scope and extent of the operation, why were the options picked (in general terms) and what process was used to develop them (initially). I am not looking for technical details.

As an example, I have a copy of the 'Deepwater Horizon Containment & Response: Harnessing Capabilities and Lessons Learned'. The report has plenty of information on individual source control actions, but does not address the process of developing them.

I appreciate any information or support you can provide. Please let me know if you need any additional information or clarification.

r/ Patrick
